

Flight of the Gulls

Sunday August 2nd – We woke up and dinghied into shore for some breakfast at the cabin. Once again we were governed by the tides so after a nice breakfast and goodbyes to family we had to get out of there or we'd be stuck on shore for the rest of the day. We pulled anchor and got going at 11:07am

We had quite a long day of travel ahead of us. First we needed to stop at the Des Moines marina and get fuel for the boat. 268 gallons later we were off and running again, traveling north past Seattle to the Edmonds Marina for the night. At 6:43pm, after about 7-1/2 hours travel time we arrived in Edmonds covering 58.18nm.

We made dinner and watched a beautiful sunset with what seemed like thousands of Seagulls stretched out along the breakwater. Every once in a while they would all take off at once and cover the red sky, making us feel like we were getting attacked.

Trip Log 91.83nm

Narrows Bridge

Wrong way!

