

“Worst Day of My Life”

Sunday August 9th & Monday the 10th – 8:35am we pushed away from the dock all stocked up and ready for a relaxing time in Desolation Sound! But first we have another north bound 50nm to travel. This last stretch is fairly exposed and can get rough at times. Today was no exception, not terrible but we got rocked around a bit for the first 25nm or so.

At 2:45pm after 45.54nm we anchored and shore tied in Tenedos Bay for the next 2 days. The water here is great for swimming (about 72 degrees) so we got all our water toys off the boat and ready for fun. We had a great time kayaking and paddle boarding around the bay then took a short hike to Unwin Lake. It's a large beautiful clear lake that is totally surrounded by the wilderness. The kids had a great time swimming in the lake and even found a makeshift canoe to play on. We had dinner, swam some more, then in the evening we got surrounded by thousands of jelly fish – so many that it sounded and looked like it was raining on the surface of the water.

The next day we decided to wake up and do this hike we heard about that's more like a scramble up a steep hill. While taking the dinghy to shore for the hike we were stopped by a couple on a sailboat who warned us of 2 bee hives on the trail. They had just done the hike and got stung. No that we know of the hive locations we didn't think it would be a problem avoiding the bees. We started the hike a right away located the first hive. No big deal we just scooted around it making sure not to agitate any of the bees. Onward up the hill we went. It was so steep we had to use the ropes someone had placed to pull us up. We were very nervous about Ava getting up but she wasn't scared at all and scrambled up the ropes like a pro.

As we neared the top we were on the lookout for the 2nd bee hive. Skylar was about 20' ahead when he yelled out "found the hive, ouch" then took off running. As we got closer Ava was scared to go by it and hesitated for a few seconds. That gave the bees just enough time to round up their buddies and attack. First it was Ava, then as I was swatting the bees off her leg they attacked me. We all took off running up the hill! Ava was crying as we rounded the top to assess the damage. Come to find out Skylar was the first to get stung but he didn't tell us. As Ava and I hesitated by the hive they had already gone into attack mode. Ava had 2 stings, Skylar 1, Julie 1 and I had 4 – 8 total stings!

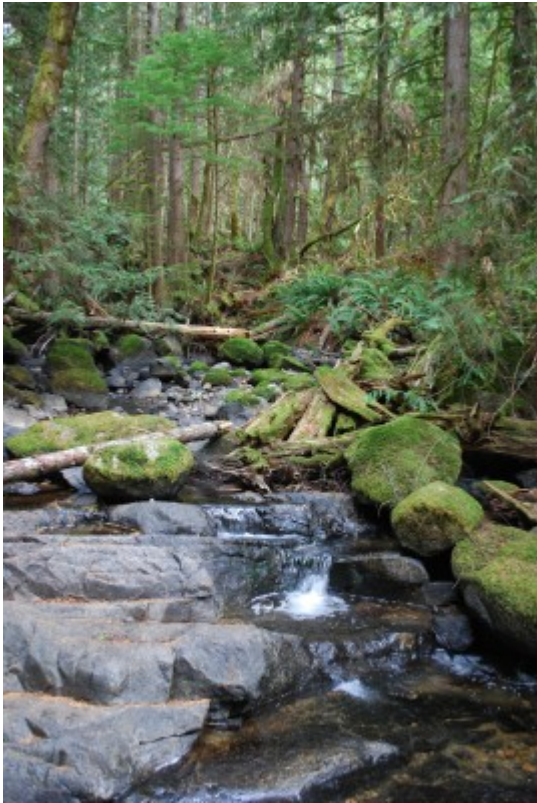

We worked to calm Ava down and have a look at the beautiful view from the top. Now the problem is that we have to go back down! Ava was already a little nervous about going down using the ropes but now she had bee stings on top of it and we had to somehow get past the hive again. Skylar and I took off on a mission to find an alternate route around the hive. We found just the right detour and formed a trail. At this point Ava kept saying "This is the worst day of my life" over and over again. But then adrenaline kicked in as she realized she had no choice but to get back down. While singing to herself and making funny jokes she said she didn't know weather to laugh or cry. In her funny rambling about all kinds of things she made her way down the hill like the tough little girl we know she is. She was proud of herself but those bee stings sure do hurt!

To take her mind off it we devised a plan to pull our paddleboard behind the dinghy like a wake board. After making a makeshift ski rope Skylar was the first to try. It pulled him right up on plane (although it's not very steady) as we whisked him around the bay. He was even brave enough to stand up like a surfboard. Ava went with Skylar, then Julie had a turn. As my turn arrived Skylar said he would pull me, I know that wouldn't end well but agreed anyway. He pulled me along nice for a while but then started turning sharper and sharper, back through the wake he whipped me around until I crashed in the sea. I should have known better!
